Taser step-up stuns critics

Less lethal option?
Previous Taser deaths raise concerns

While police forces are lauding the expansion of Taser use, community advocates, lawyers and families of those who have been shot by police are skeptical of the move to let frontline officers in Ontario carry Tasers.

Stun guns have had a rocky history in the public eye. The 2007 death of Robert Dziekanski, a Polish man Tasered five times by Mounties in Vancouver International Airport, brought public scorn upon the weapon and drew attention to the potentially lethal results of its use.

Madeleine Meilleur, the minister of community safety and correctional services, announced Tuesday that all frontline officers in Ontario can carry Tasers, after the appropriate training and authorization from their respective chiefs. Police chiefs in Ontario have been calling for greater access to Tasers for years. Supervisors and tactical officers in Ontario have been able to carry Tasers since 2002.

Now in the wake of the fatal shooting of Sammy Yatim last month by Toronto police, Ontario has opened the door to more police opting for Tasers, not guns, in some confrontations. However, Karyn Greenwood-Graham, who started Grief2Action, a collective of families affected by police killings, says the answer doesn't lie in expanding the police arsenal, despite that being one of the recommendations from the inquest into her son's death.

"I'm really worried about this. This is not the solution. The solution is in talent, not tools. It's the attitude — the person that's doing it must be trained correctly and thoroughly," she said.

"It's the easy thing to recommend," said Greenwood-Graham. "The jurors are the general public — it's what a reasonable person would recommend. Those people aren't exposed to the research that perhaps the families have done.

"How do we know that the police are not going to over-Taser or use them correctly?" she asked. "It's still the fact of the training." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Sentencing. HIV-positive woman won't get dangerous-offender label

The Crown will no longer seek a "dangerous offender" or "long-term offender" designation for a woman found guilty for the second time of aggravated sexual assault after she failed to tell a sexual partner she had HIV.

A sentencing hearing for Jennifer Murphy, 40, was adjourned last week in Barrie after Crown attorney Bhavna Bhangu sought approval from the attorney general to pursue one of the serious criminal designations.

The dangerous-offender label, reserved for Canada's worst criminals, has been bestowed on only four women — and one of those cases was reversed on appeal.

Both designations mean a minimum two-year prison sentence followed by up to 10 years of supervision. In Murphy's case, Bhangu is seeking a sentence of no less than two years.

The defence has asked for a sentence of less than two years, with Murphy getting credit for time served.

The Barrie woman was previously convicted of aggravated sexual assault in 2005.

The sentencing hearing continues next month.

Wham-jam: Cronut burgers off the menu

Epic Burgers reopens. Maple bacon jam identified as source of food-borne illness

It wasn't the cronut or the burger, but the maple bacon jam.

"New lab results indicate that the maple bacon jam, which is one component of the cronut burger, is the cause of food-borne illness at the CNE," Dr. David McKeown, Toronto's medical officer of health, said in a statement Tuesday. "We have ensured the contaminated product is not served. There is no risk to the public."

Toronto Public Health is testing the maple syrup, bacon, brown sugar and water in the jam to determine which ingredient was contaminated by Staphylococcus aureus, after Friday's laboratory results found the toxin in samples of the cheeseburger-doughnut-croissant hybrid.

There was not a customer in sight Tuesday morning in front of the reopened Epic Burgers and Waffles stand in the CNE's food building. Servers said it was because they were still awaiting the beef for their burgers to arrive from their supplier. But the much-maligned cronut burger was noticeably absent from the menu.

'Abundance of caution'

"The bun for the cronut burger came from the same source as the maple bacon jam, so out of an abundance of caution, the operator has decided to remove that item from his menu."

CNE general manager Dave Bednar

"The bun for the cronut burger came from the same source as the maple bacon jam, so out of an abundance of caution, the operator has decided to remove that item from his menu," said CNE general manager Dave Bednar. "Sorry, you're not going to have a cronut burger this year."

Fair-goer Jaclyn Moody remained skeptical about eating at Epic Burgers, despite the enhanced safety measures.

"I understand it's probably safer than ever to eat there today," she said." But how can we be sure? I don't want to get sick and have my whole day ruined."

While most seemed skittish about eating at the newly reopened Epic Burgers, Peter Bouhs, 45, and son Jason, 8, were looking forward to indulging in the vendor's gluttonous eats.

"I'm willing to try it," Peter said. "It must be very clean now with public health and the media watching."

"Also, no one got sick here last year," chimed in Jason.

The Bouhs now had their eyes set on the slightly less over-the-top classic American smashburger, a bacon cheeseburger. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A Taser in every holster?

Announcement.
Ontario expands access to permit all police to carry stun guns

JESSICA SMITH
jessica.smith@metronews.ca

The Ontario government announced Tuesday police forces will be allowed to arm all officers with conducted energy weapons (CEWs) such as Tasers, which had previously been restricted to sergeants and officers in some special units.

"Our police officers are trained to use de-escalation first whenever possible, but when that approach does not work, we need to equip our officers with another tool," said Madeleine Meilleur, minister of community safety and correctional services.

SIU's role

The Special Investigations Unit will investigate if a CEW causes serious injury or death to a member of the public, and if an officer misuses the device, they could face discipline or charges. But the SIU won't necessarily consider all injuries from a CEW to be serious, and the minister said she was not considering redefining the SIU's mandate.

The announcement was made a month after Toronto teenager Sammy Yatim was shot eight times by an officer who did not carry a Taser, and then Tasered by a supervising officer who came on scene later. The announcement had nothing to do with Yatim's death and was originally scheduled for June, but it was delayed, said Meilleur.

Officers will get 12 hours of training on how to use a CEW, an increase from the eight hours given to the senior officers who currently use them. Every time a CEW is used, it will be documented and reviewed, said Meilleur.

The province will not be providing direct funding for the weapons. Instead, the money will come from the regular police budgets and will be a matter between each force and its police board, she said.

Each force will decide separately how many officers will use CEWs, and police brass from different forces present at the announcement indicated they would take time to consider how to deploy the weapons.

Toronto police Deputy Chief Mike Federico said the force does plan to make CEWs available to its more than 2,800 frontline officers, but it will need to discuss the issues with the police-services board.

Waterloo Regional Police Sgt. Steve Cahoon is pictured with a Taser X26 on Tuesday. Ontario has approved the wider use of Tasers and other conducted energy weapons by the province's police forces. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

The process of acquiring the weapons will take months to a year, depending on the availability of the product and time it takes to train the officers, said Federico.

All provinces but Quebec now allow frontline officers to carry CEWs, according to the ministry. Still, the decision was "difficult," said Meilleur, citing the death of Robert Dziekanski, who was Tasered multiple times at the Vancouver airport.

Twelve juries in coroner's inquests have recommended considering expanding the deployment of CEWs to save lives, said Dirk Huyer, chief coroner for Ontario.

Chief forensic pathologist Dr. Michael Sven Pollanen said that as a physician and a scientist, he believes the decision was a good example of "evidence-based public policy."

"Sudden and unexpected death after the deployment of a Taser is unusual and quite rare," Pollanen said, adding that coroner's juries have found CEWs to be a contributory cause of death when there have been underlying medical issues in some cases.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association (CCLA) was critical of the decision and urged police forces "instead to invest in de-escalation training, and mental-health and disability crisis-response teams, rather than additional weaponry."

The CCLA pointed to incidents where CEWs were misused: In August 2012, Toronto police acting Sgt. Christopher Hominuk was demoted for pushing his Taser into the crotch of a handcuffed man and threatening to Taser him in the "f–ing nuts," and in April 2013, Justice Stephen D. Brown berated Halton police officers for Tasering a mental-health patient six times.

In support

Tasering done right

Paul Cook, the president of the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police, is also the top cop in North Bay, where he says Tasers have prevented tragedy.

"In 2012 we deployed the Taser 12 times, but only fired it three times," he said. "Sometimes just showing the Taser has the desired result of de-escalating a situation and ensuring both the officer and the subject go home safely."

In one of those cases, the subject was armed with a knife.

"We had a male that wanted to suicide by cop," he said. "He was approaching two officers who had handguns out and was forcing one of them onto the highway. The other officer deployed his asp, which is a baton, and it distracted him so the other officer who had a CEW was able to deploy it, fire it and the subject was immobilized.

"They removed the knife, they handcuffed him and went home safely. There was no injury to the subject in that case."

Without the CEW, the officer would have been forced to shoot the subject, said Cook.

Kevin Drew of Broken Social Scene

Sketch program participants Helen Carlson and Patrick Reid, on keyboard, perform with Kevin Drew at the MusiCounts TD Community Music grant recipient announcement on Tuesday at the Sketch Working Arts program in Parkdale. LIZ BROWN/METRO

For a woman with a voice that can make a whole room sit up and take notice, singer Helen Carlson is soft spoken when asked about her aspirations.

"I'm hoping to get a little CD out soon," she says, smiling.

Carlson, who goes by the stage name Aki Katsu, sings pop and neo-soul. She's just one of the participants in Sketch, a community initiative dedicated to engaging marginalized youth in the arts.

For the last two years, she's been coming to the Toronto-based program for a few hours a week, honing her skills in singing and sound engineering.

Carlson, 25, says if it weren't for Sketch, she would've never been introduced to new genres of music or had the opportunity to work with professionals, such as former Black Cabbage frontman Michael O'Connell.

"It's been really amazing working with Michael. He's become a mentor and challenges me to try new things," she says.

On Tuesday morning, she and other Sketch members showcased their skills with O'Connell and Broken Social Scene's Kevin Drew to a room full of media at the Sketch Working Arts Program site in the Masaryk-Cowan Community Centre in Parkdale.

The performance capped an event announcing the recipients of a $200,000 MusiCounts TD Community Music Grant program. The fledgling program is the brainchild of Drew, who two years ago wondered — during a meeting with youth music charity MusiCounts — how the organization could get involved in funding music programs outside of schools.

"Allan Reid (director of MusiCounts) was really the guy who found a way to make it happen, and I'll always be grateful for that," says Drew.

TD agreed to come on board to help fund the program, which donated to 15 groups across Canada. This included a $20,000 grant for Sketch, which helped purchase new instruments and computers — items that will be put to good use, judging by the quality of Tuesday's performance.

‘Fun’ bakery linked to foul food scandal

Tainted cronut. CNE food-poisoning traced back to specialty dessert shop’s maple bacon jam

The “fun, foodie studio” behind the Toronto version of the cronut — a doughnut-croissant hybrid — is hanging up its apron, at least for now.

Le Dolci made a name for itself for its customized cupcakes and cupcake classes. But on Tuesday, the little bakery tucked near Trinity Bellwoods Park was linked to a food-borne illness affecting more than 200 people at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Toronto Public Health said the culprit is Le Dolci’s specialty maple bacon jam, which topped the now infamous cronut burger offered by Epic Burgers and Waffles.

On Tuesday, the bakery quietly closed, voluntarily suspending operations for the investigation.

A sign on the door mentioned a preplanned summer vacation set to last until Sept. 3 — the day after the CNE, where the cronut burger was expected to be a food star, closes.

Le Dolci has been in the media previously in a more positive light, for everything from its Canadiana-themed cupcake tutorials to royal-inspired classes offered around the time of Prince William and Kate Middleton’s wedding.

Around the time Le Dolci opened, Le Dolci’s owner, Lisa Sanguedolce, told 24 Hours the company was about more than just baking.

“Cupcake decorating is not so much about the cake, delicious as it is, but about the creativity that is within us to make each tiny fairy cake special,” she said.

But Le Dolci won’t be making any more artistic creations in the near future.

Well-timed vacation?

An employee said she couldn’t comment except to say Le Dolci was “co-operating” and the timing of the vacation had nothing to do with the investigation.

- Posts to the company’s website earlier in August about the cronut burger were taken down.
- In a statement Le Dolci said it’s “very concerned about what has happened” and it takes food safety “very seriously.”

Transparency. Trudeau says folks are stoked that he openly spoke of toke

Justin Trudeau says he's received "almost universal" praise for admitting he smoked marijuana after becoming a member of Parliament.

And that certainly seemed to be the case Tuesday as the Liberal leader did a spot of mainstreeting in downtown Charlottetown.

Young and old seemed giddy at the prospect of meeting him. They sought his autograph or to have their picture taken; several spontaneously thanked him, as one middle-aged woman put it, "for telling the truth, Justin, no matter what."

"The conversations I've had with Canadians have almost universally been about people pleased with the level of openness and transparency that a Canadian politician is demonstrating," Trudeau said later.

Opponents have pounced on Trudeau's confession that he toked up at a dinner party three years ago. They accuse him of flouting the law and demonstrating that he's unfit to govern. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Great-niece of infamous gangster comes north for new documentary

Feeding off swirling rumours and passed-down stories about Chicago gangster Al Capone's bootleg operation in the Canadian Prairies, a Saskatchewan documentary film crew is going deep — literally — to search for proof behind the prohibition tale.

The documentary, titled Finding Al, involves historical data and assorted tales surrounding the iconic mobster's rumoured appearances in and around Moose Jaw, Sask., in the 1920s.

"I've been to the Tunnels (of Moose Jaw) many times and I just wanted to investigate it," director and producer Kelly-Anne Riess told Metro in Moose Jaw — nicknamed Little Chicago by some — on Tuesday, referring to passageways below the city's downtown streets. The tunnels were turned into a tourist attraction in 2000 with Capone-themed tours and costumed characters.

Deirdre Capone, 73, centre, is filmed in the Tunnels of Moose Jaw for a documentary, Finding Al, about her great-uncle.
ALYSSA MCDONALD/METRO

Because of extremely limited paper documentation, Riess has focused on accounts passed down the generations.

Riess had planned to visit Capone's great-niece Deirdre, who has written a book about her family story. But the 73-year-old ended up coming to Saskatchewan from her Florida home to be featured in the documentary.

"There is no one else that can (tell the story)," Deirdre Capone said after taking a guided tour of the Tunnels.

Capone didn't let on to her relation to the infamous crime figure during the tour, even whispering to a Metro reporter, "I wonder what these people would say if they knew who I was."

Riess pointed out that her favourite Saskatchewan story on Capone comes from a Weyburn-area home, where Deirdre's great-uncle would allegedly host firearm-filled parties once a year for his men and local farmers.

"It's our own Saskatchewan thing," Riess said. "I just like the idea of bootlegging mobster farmers."

No plan to recall Parliament. Baird talks Syria with opposition

Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird is talking to opposition leaders about the developing crisis surrounding Syria. But the department says calls to recall Parliament to discuss military action are premature.

Baird spoke first to Tom Mulcair, whose spokesman, George Smith, said the NDP Leader "was very clear with Minister Baird that Parliament would have to be recalled if there was any direct military involvement. Mr. Mulcair also stressed the importance of working with the United Nations."

Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau, in P.E.I. for a caucus retreat, said Canada needs to proceed cautiously.

"As soon as we talk about military intervention, there are many, many questions unanswered. Like what would military victory look like? Who would we be helping?" Trudeau said.

"There are grave questions, both about the government side but also about the rebel side. That's where we have to have honest and open dialogue about it. And I'm certainly not going to pretend that anyone has all the answers."

Dissent. UN mandate needed for action against Syria, Italy says

Any military strike against Syria must be authorized by the UN Security Council, Italy insisted on Tuesday.

Briefing Parliament, Foreign Minister Emma Bonino called Syria's alleged chemical attack a "war crime" but said her government wouldn't support military action without UN Security Council authorization.

"Italy would not actively take in any military action ... beyond the context of the Security Council, which for us is and remains the only point of legal reference that cannot be ignored," Bonino said.

Italy offered both military bases on its territory and its own aircraft for the 2011 NATO campaign in Libya. Bonino didn't specify how Italy might view base use during any intervention against Syria led by allies.

UN negligence partly to blame for killings in Kosovo: Amnesty

Amnesty International denounced the UN administration in Kosovo for failing to investigate the mass abductions and murders of Kosovo Serbs in the aftermath of the 1998-99 war. A report released Tuesday lists several cases where UN officials allegedly failed to investigate atrocities against the Serbs, which contributed to "crimes against humanity" and the "climate of impunity prevailing in Kosovo," Amnesty's Sian Jones said in a statement.

CIA behind overthrow

Iran to debate suing U.S. over 1953 coup

Iran's parliament has approved fast-tracking debate on a bill to sue the U.S. for its involvement in the 1953 CIA-orchestrated coup that overthrew the country's democratically elected prime minister Mohammed Mossadegh and restored the oppressive regime of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. Deliberations begin on Wednesday over how to launch a formal complaint accusing the U.S. of intervening in Iran's internal affairs and inflicting damages on the Persian state.

U.S. lays out case for Syrian strike

Closer to attack. Officials prepare legal justification for military intervention

The Obama administration tried to bolster its case on Tuesday for possible military action against Syria within days, with intelligence agencies preparing to release intercepted communications aimed at proving Bashar Assad perpetrated a large-scale chemical attack on civilians.

The U.S. and international partners were unlikely to undertake military action before Thursday. That's when British Prime Minister David Cameron will convene an emergency meeting of Parliament during which MPs are expected to vote on a motion clearing the way for an armed response.

Obama and Cameron conferred on response plans on Tuesday, their second known conversation in recent days.

Obama administration officials argued that Assad's actions posed a direct threat to U.S. national security, providing President Barack Obama with a possible legal justification for launching a strike without authorization from the United Nations or Congress. However, officials did not detail how the U.S. was directly threatened by an attack contained within Syria's borders. Nor did they present concrete proof that Assad was responsible.

"Allowing the use of chemical weapons on a significant scale to take place without a response would present a significant challenge to, threat to the United States' national security," White House spokesman Jay Carney said.

Assad has denied using chemical weapons, calling the allegations "preposterous."

Obama is weighing a response focused narrowly on punishing Assad for violating international agreements that ban the use of chemical weapons, an act he repeatedly has said would cross a "red line." Officials said the goal was not to drive the Syrian leader from power or impact the broader trajectory of Syria's bloody civil war, which is in its third year.

"The options we are considering are not about regime change," Carney said.

U.S. officials say the most likely operation would be largely sea-based, with the strikes coming primarily from navy warships in the Mediterranean Sea. Fighter jets often are deployed to monitor the area and protect the ships, but Syria's robust air-defence system makes air strikes more difficult and risky.

'No doubt'

"There's no doubt who is responsible for this heinous use of chemical weapons in Syria: The Syrian regime." U.S. Vice-President Joe Biden

At a news conference in Damascus on Tuesday, Syrian Foreign Minister Walid al-Moallem said his country would use "all means available" to repel a U.S.-led strike. "We have the means to defend ourselves and we will surprise everyone," al-Moallem said, beneath a portrait of President Bashar Assad, who is accused of using chemical weapons. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

'We are ready to go': U.S. defense secretary

U.S. Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

Military forces are poised to strike Syria immediately if the commander-in-chief gives the order, U.S. Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said on Monday.

The U.S. Navy has four destroyers in the eastern Mediterranean within range of targets in Syria and also has warplanes in the region.

"We are ready to go," Hagel said during a television interview while travelling in Asia.

Before any strike, the U.S. also plans to release additional intelligence it says will directly link Assad to the Aug. 21 alleged attack in the Damascus suburbs. A U.S. official said the report is expected to include "signals intelligence," or information gathered from intercepted communications.

Even before releasing that information, U.S. officials said they had very little doubt that Assad was culpable in what is believed to have been a chemical-weapons attack, based on witness reports, the symptoms of those killed or injured and intelligence showing the Syrian government has not lost control of its chemical-weapons stockpiles.

U.S. officials have spent much of the week seeking to rally international support for an aggressive response to the alleged attack.

The flurry of action is in stark contrast to President Barack Obama's previously restrained approach to Syria's civil war, which has left more than 100,000 people dead, according to UN estimates.

Chelsea Manning. Gender switch announcement not an attention grab: Lawyer

Chelsea Manning U.S. ARMY FILE

Soldier Chelsea Manning, previously known as Bradley Manning, decided to announce that she wanted to live as a woman the day after her sentencing for a massive leak of U.S. secrets because a military prison said publicly it would not provide hormone treatment, her attorney said.

Attorney David Coombs said that Manning had known for a long time she would make such a statement, but "she wanted, essentially, for the media surrounding the trial to dissipate."

Manning did not want people to think the statement was insincere. "People might think it was an effort to get further attention," Coombs said.

Manning was sentenced last week to 35 years in prison for leaking thousands of pages of classified military and diplomatic material to WikiLeaks. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cops defend not announcing sex workers' deaths sooner

The RCMP are defending the decision not to issue a warning earlier in a case in which two sex trade workers were found dead, saying there was early evidence to suggest the first case was a suicide.

RCMP issued a public warning this week after two women who were known to be online escorts were found dead in the same apartment building almost two weeks apart.

Advocate groups say a warning should have come after the first death. THE CANADIAN PRESS

New pics show night Boston bombing suspect surrendered

Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. Officer released dramatic photos because of anger over Rolling Stone cover

New photos show the Boston Marathon bombing suspect, his face bloodied, climbing out of a boat in a suburban backyard as heavily armed police officers wait for him to drop to the ground.

The images were among those a state officer provided last month to Boston Magazine, which published some then and more on Tuesday.

Sgt. Sean Murphy took photos the April night police cornered Dzhokhar Tsarnaev in a dry-docked boat in Watertown, just outside Boston. He wasn't authorized to release the photos but said he was angry about a Rolling Stone magazine cover he felt glamorized Tsarnaev.

Shot through face

The surgeon who treated Tsarnaev after his capture said he had been shot through the face and had a fractured skull, among other injuries.

The new photos include more shots of Tsarnaev coming out of the boat, his head bloody and a red laser trained on his head. They also show him dropping to the ground, where officers and medical personnel rushed to treat him. Other photos show tense federal, state and local police officials meeting in a command centre and elite police teams gathering in the streets earlier in the day.

Tsarnaev has pleaded not guilty to charges in the bombing, which killed three people and injured more than 260 others. His older brother was killed following a gun battle with police. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

1963 speech. Barack Obama acknowledges work of Martin Luther King Jr. and others in pushing forward racial equality in the U.S.

Barack Obama was two years old and growing up in Hawaii when Martin Luther King Jr., the American civil rights leader, delivered his "I Have a Dream" speech from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington. Fifty years later, the nation's first black president will stand as the most high-profile example of the racial progress King espoused, delivering remarks Wednesday at a nationwide commemoration of the 1963 demonstration for jobs, economic justice and racial equality.

Obama believes his success in attaining the nation's highest political office is a testament to the dedication of King and others, and that he would not be the current White House occupant if it were not for their willingness to persevere through repeated imprisonments, bomb threats and blasts from billy clubs and fire hoses.

In tribute, Obama keeps a bust of King in the Oval Office and a framed copy of the program from that historic day when 250,000 people gathered for the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

King was assassinated in April 1968 outside of a hotel room in Memphis, Tenn.

The "Let Freedom Ring" commemoration is scheduled to run from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Bell-ringing commemorations are also planned across the country. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Washington lobbying for 2024 Summer Olympics

Washington is making a push to host the 2024 Olympics.

DC 2024 president Bob Sweeney announced Tuesday the formation of a non-profit group aimed at making Washington the first American city to host the Summer Games since Atlanta in 1996, and the first to host an Olympics since the Winter Games were held in Salt Lake City in 2002.

"We are the safest and most secure city in the world," Sweeney said. "The largest expense of any Olympic Games is security, and the fact that we've got it pretty built in to our everyday life here in Washington, we would leverage that asset tremendously."

China. Abducted boy has eyes removed, corneas stolen, authorities say

The illegal organ trade in China took a gruesome turn after a six-year-old boy had his eyes plucked out in order to steal his corneas, authorities believe.

The boy was playing outside his house alone in the northern province of Shanxi, when he was taken, drugged and had his eyes removed.

His distraught parents noticed he was missing and organized a search for him. They found him hours after he had disappeared in a nearby field, with a bloody face. His father told a Chinese news agency that at first, he thought the boy had fallen and hurt himself.

"He had blood all over his face. His eyelids were turned inside out. And inside, his eyeballs were not there," his father told Shanxi TV.

"We didn't notice his eyes were gone when we discovered him. We thought he fell down from high."

Hospital doctors told the family the boy's eyes had been plucked out.

His eyeballs were eventually found near the spot where he was discovered, but the corneas were gone.

The now blind boy, who also was reportedly born with a cleft palette, is recovering in hospital. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Organ trafficking

The horrific case has once again shone a spotlight on organ trafficking in China.

- Proper organ donation in the People's Republic is a relatively new concept, but the government has been internationally condemned for the practice of selling organs retrieved from dead prisoners, said David Matas, a Canadian international human-rights lawyer.
- The Chinese have only recently adopted an organ-donation system and it is growing slowly, he said.

Cuban officials report spread of cholera

Outbreak. Disease causes dehydration that can be fatal, but it's treatable if detected in time

A man reads a copy of Cuba's state newspaper Granma in Havana on Tuesday. Cuba is in the midst of a cholera outbreak, with over 160 cases linked to Havana, Santiago and Camaguey provinces. FRANKLIN REYES/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cuba has reported a cholera outbreak to international health monitors, with 163 new cases this year associated with three provinces.

According to a bulletin by the Pan American Health Organization, island authorities reported Friday that the cases were linked to Havana, Santiago and Camaguey provinces.

Patients who contracted the waterborne disease included 12 tourists. There were no reported fatalities.

In Havana, the outbreak was traced to two food-service centres where some food handlers were found to be infected with cholera without displaying any symptoms.

"The food outlets have since adopted appropriate sanitary measures," the Pan American Health Organization said.

Cuban state media announced last summer that cholera had sickened 417 people and killed three. It had been unheard of on the island for years. In January there was another report of 51 cases in Havana.

There has been no word since then about the disease in official media such as Communist Party newspaper Granma. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ottawa appeases critics of U.S. tobacco proposal

TransPacific Partnership. Advocates say companies would win the ability to challenge countries

A U.S. proposal would call for country-to-country consultations by public health officials before any challenge is launched. CAMERON SPENCER/GETTY IMAGES

The Canadian government says it sees no specific threat in a controversial U.S. proposal to include tobacco in the TransPacific Partnership trade negotiations that health advocates argue will make it more difficult to enforce anti-smoking campaigns.

A spokesman for Trade Minister Ed Fast says the government is still reviewing the proposal, along with another tabled Tuesday that would carve out tobacco from the TPP altogether, but said it does not believe there will be any impact on Canada's anti-smoking regulations.

"Canada's ability to regulate in the public interest, including health, remains unchanged in the U.S. proposal," said Rudy Husny, press secretary to the trade minister.

Other officials say the U.S. proposal does not give tobacco companies any more rights to sue countries than currently exist.

Assange dons wig to star in video parody

Pitch to Australians. WikiLeaks founder has been campaigning for Senate seat by Skype from a room in London's Ecuadorian embassy

In a departure from his public image as the earnest fugitive, WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange donned a long blond wig to star in a video parody of an Australian singing legend filmed in the Ecuadorian Embassy in London.

Lip-syncing John Farnham's 1986 hit You're the Voice, Assange made a pitch to Australian voters to back his troubled WikiLeaks Party in national elections Sept. 7.

The 42-year-old Australian is the newly formed party's star candidate and is running for a Senate seat in the state of Victoria despite being confined to the embassy in London for more than a year.

Rocking the vote

"We can write what we want to write."

Julian Assange's parody version of John Farnham's 1986 hit You're the Voice

Assange last week took responsibility for problems in his political party, saying he had over-delegated to his team while he was concentrating on the cases of army Pte. Chelsea Manning — previously known as Bradley Manning — and of U.S. National Security Agency leaker Edward Snowden.

Wrong twin. Dating site apologizes for using image of dead president

A Scandinavian dating site has apologized for mistakenly using the image of Poland's late president Lech Kaczynski on billboards in Warsaw advocating romance for people in relationships.

Sigurd Vedal, head of the Victoria Milan site, said on Tuesday that the campaign was to be humorous and use the image of former prime minister Jaroslaw Kaczynski, a bachelor known to be fond of cats, and a cat's image.

It uses the phrase "lacking a claw," something without energy, to refer to a stagnant relationship.

The billboards put up Monday drew complaints from Internet surfers and media because they featured Kaczynski's identical twin, the late president Lech Kaczynski, who was killed in a plane crash in Russia in 2010.

The twins are "very similar," explaining the mistake, Vedal said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

... 21, 20, 19 — and we don't have liftoff of new rocket

A boy waits for the launch of Japan's new Epsilon rocket at the Uchinoura Space Center in Kimotsuki town, Kagoshima, southern Japan, Tuesday. However, Japan aborted the launch 19 seconds before liftoff, saying an irregularity in the rocket posture was detected. Japan hopes its first new rocket design since the H2A in 2001 will be a cheaper and more efficient way of putting satellites into space.

Helping students make most of new opportunities

Scotiabanker Thomas Park shares his own experience to help international students at UBC make the most of every opportunity.

"Make the most of it, because you never know what's next," says Korean-born Thomas Park when advising international students at Scotiabank's UniverCity branch at the University of British Columbia (UBC). Still a student himself, the Vancouver customer service representative has plenty of advice, based on his family history and experience as a money-strapped student.

While Thomas is busy commuting between his business classes at Simon Fraser University and his Scotiabank® position, he recalls how at age 10 his family immigrated from South Korea. "I only knew the alphabet from A to T, since Thomas starts with T, but I quickly adapted to Canada's school system."

He later appreciated how his father struggled to support the family without work for a year. "Without much English, he went through hardships to find us a place to live, and go to school," recounts Thomas, noting that his dad couldn't resume his previous banking career for lack of language skills.

Sharing his father's determination, university-bound Thomas enrolled in the Canadian Armed Forces reserves to pay tuition, although he harboured a desire to become a financial advisor. His interest in banking increased when he opened a student account at Scotiabank. Notes Thomas, "I saw how it's important to choose an account with the right benefits for you, such as no monthly fee and even reward points for free movies."

As a satisfied Scotiabank customer, Thomas jumped at the chance to work at the UBC branch last fall. "I know what students are going through and I tell them that although they are busy studying, they must understand their finances," explains Thomas, whose happy customers come back with friends who also seek patient, friendly advice.

He takes this same approach with UBC's international students who are often unfamiliar with the Canadian banking system: "I help them understand service fees, the difference between chequing and savings accounts, and how to receive wire transfers from home and earn higher interest on their funds."

Thomas gladly outlines the advantages of the Scotiabank StartRight® Program[1] which includes a free day-to-day bank account for one year[2], a wide range of credit card options[3] and a number of other customized services and benefits.

"I remind them that they may be a student now, but they should build a good credit history so that they can obtain a loan or mortgage in the future. You never know what's down the road."

"Students should find the right advisor," says Thomas. "Instead of just going to any bank, find an advisor who understands your situation, explains everything, and shows what else the bank can do for you." With his memories as a newcomer and his knowledge of campus life, Thomas is ready to help international students make the most of each new opportunity in Canada.

Feds requested data on 219 Facebook users

Online privacy. Firm is latest tech company to release stats on how often governments seek customer information

The Canadian government demanded Facebook turn over information on 219 users in the first half of the year, the company said Tuesday in releasing global data.

They were among about 38,000 Facebook users whose data was scrutinized by authorities in 74 countries, Facebook said. About half of those orders came from the United States.

Facebook said it turned over some data to authorities in 44 per cent of the Canadian cases, and that it was required by law to do so. The company declined to give any specific details.

The social-networking giant is the latest technology firm to release figures on how often governments seek information about its customers. Microsoft and Google have done the same.

"The vast majority of these requests relate to criminal cases, such as robberies or kidnappings," Facebook said on its blog. "In many of these cases, these government requests seek basic subscriber information, such as name and length of service. Other requests may also seek IP address logs or actual account content."

Facebook and other technology companies have been criticized for helping the National Security Agency in the U.S. secretly collect data on customers. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Talking Turkey

- Facebook and Twitter have become organizing platforms for activists and, as such, are targets for authorities. Following anti-government protests in Turkey in May and June, Facebook denied it provided information about protest organizers to the Turkish government.
- Data released Tuesday show Turkish authorities submitted 96 requests covering 173 users. Facebook said it provided some data in about 45 of those cases.

Egypt's tourism industry has that empty feeling

Souvenirs rest on a car dashboard at the Giza Pyramids near Cairo on Tuesday. The chairman of the Egyptian Airports Co. says some flights to the country are arriving nearly empty since this summer's violent turmoil. Flights that can carry more than 100 passengers from Europe arrive with just nine, and major tour operators in Scandinavia say they have cancelled at least 60,000 trips. CAN AFFLECK BE THE WORST BATMAN?

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Are you ready to have some fun?

Are you ready to play the Batman game?

Granted, this is probably only fun for people who have yet to get beyond the mental age of 12, but that's almost everybody. The rest of you, get over yourselves.

The Batman game is easy to play, of course: In the history of Batman stretching back to 1943, who has been the best — and the worst — Batman?

It's time to play the game again, because now that The Dark Knight's Christian Bale has moved on to Shakespeare or whatever, Ben Affleck has been announced as his replacement, causing thousands of bat fans to fall screeching from the sky.

Even though Ben has restored his reputation with an Oscar for Argo, the stench from the "Bennifer" era and his participation in Gigli, often cited as the worst movie ever, lingers.

There's even a petition on the White House website demanding that the president intervene and prevent 'Batfleck' from spoiling Batman.

Many fans believe Bale redeemed Batman from weak portrayals by otherwise decent actors such as George Clooney and indecent actors such as Val Kilmer, and they don't want to see another lame flying mammal re-infest the bat cave.

OK, if Clooney, the world's most admired movie star, failed to own the belfry, what does Batfleck expect? It's a dangerous job, fighting crime in Gotham City for $15 million an episode.

When you play the game, you probably start during the era when you first encountered the Caped Crusader. For me, that would be back in the '60s, and the inane Batman TV series of 1966-68 starring Adam West. Of course, it was supposed to be inane, or "camp," I believe it was called then, when inane was cool.

I never bought that.

Then, in the late '80s, Tim Burton made Beetlejuice star Michael Keaton his Batman, generating the same kind of horror now gripping the streets of Gotham and other locales over Batfleck. But Keaton turned out to be really good; so good, he rivals Bale as a fan favourite, especially for those who were alive in the '80s.

For the most part, people seem to prefer the intense, brooding Batguys to the Bat-light Clooneys or Kilmers.

Even Clooney himself thinks he stunk up the cave: "With hindsight," he said "it's easy to look back at this and go 'Woah, that was really s--t and I was really bad in it.'"

Of course, if you're really serious about this stuff, you can spread your wings and get into a variation on a theme: the Batman nemesis game. For example, who's the best Penguin, Burgess Meredith or Danny DeVito? Or how about the best Joker? Jack Nicholson or Heath Ledger?

If we can keep this going, we'll never have to grow up. Batman forever!

Fun after curfew? Don't count on it

Egyptians break curfew by playing soccer during the nighttime in the Garden City neighbourhood of Cairo.

In every corner of the Egyptian capital, a bustling city of 18 million that rarely sleeps, people are locked up in their homes at night under a military-imposed curfew that has driven people up the walls, sometimes literally.

To kill time, one said he spent the night counting flowers on his wallpaper — a staggering 865. Another tested how many cucumbers he can fit in a refrigerator drawer. A third calculated the speed of an ant crawling on his balcony rail.

The curfew has been a shock to Cairo, a city where cafés stay packed into the night and parents routinely take their children out for dinners nearing midnight.

The military-backed government's curfew, after violent unrest following the July 3 coup that ousted President Mohammed Morsi, slashed the typical Cairo 24-hour life to just 11 hours. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What to do...

- Some predicted a baby boom next winter. Cynics suggest a hike in divorce rates — spouses are locked up together for longer.
- Others fled the turmoil to the Mediterranean coastline.

RE: Talking About Sex? Gasp! Published Aug. 21

I thought it was a really interesting and apt point made by the author that children and teens are exposed, without question, to huge amounts of violence, and yet are sheltered from any open, honest, and fact- or experience-based discussion of sex and sexuality.

Due to the inadequacy of sex education in schools, and many parents' squeamishness about discussing the topic, teens are left to educate themselves and each other about sex — getting their (mis)information from urban myths, chat rooms, and reality television. Talking to one's child about sex can be difficult, so parents should be glad there is this type of self-guided, science-based exhibition to help teach their children/teens about healthy sexuality.

The "self-appointed guardians of the public morality" are kidding themselves by thinking that this exhibit (or any open discussions about sex) will newly expose teens to "the discovery of attraction, seduction, desire, and intimacy."

So what is it about sex? Unfortunately, our society still operates on a puritanical value system, that not only turns a blind eye to the realities of youth and sex, but which also paints sex and sexuality as something that is shameful and should not be spoken about.

A curious idea and its interesting conversation

Ironside. Actor responds to criticism over being cast as detective in a wheelchair

When it came time to prepare for his role as the wheelchair-bound detective in Global's reboot of the television classic Ironside, Blair Underwood turned to his mother for advice.

"I spent a lot of time talking to her about her experiences," Underwood said about his mother, who has multiple sclerosis and uses a wheelchair.

"It was very important that we as professionals … me as an actor, are really respectful and authentic as we can be to this disability that this character has."

The fact Underwood's character uses a wheelchair is about as far as this reboot of the TV classic goes in trying to emulate Raymond Burr's show, which aired from 1967 to 1975.

"It was a very curious idea; I was a little taken aback," admitted Underwood about being asked to join the cast.

"But then I thought, I liked the old Ironside. The only elements we took are his name, Ironside, the fact that he is a detective, the fact he is in a wheelchair."

Airing Wednesdays starting Oct. 2, the series picks up two years after Underwood's character, Robert Ironside, is paralyzed by a gun shot while investigating a case.

"He is very much trying to reconcile this new version of himself," Underwood says of his character, whose story is told in flashbacks throughout the series.

Still, Underwood's casting in the series hasn't been without controversy.

Some have criticized the casting as offensive because, instead of hiring an actor who uses a wheelchair, they went with an able-bodied actor instead.

"I think it is great that it has brought the conversation forward," said Underwood. "It's a conversation that I get, I respect it, and what I derive from that, from speaking to one particular actor who is disabled, is their frustration. Because actors who are disabled, from what I understand, are often not thought of in terms of casting. Producers don't think to cast a disabled actor." METRO

James Spader is a notorious criminal in The Blacklist. CONTRIBUTED

Spader's no Whitey Bulger, and that's OK

Blacklist. New series may resemble real life and movies, but there's plenty that's original

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

In his new series, The Blacklist, James Spader may play a notorious criminal who has long been one of the FBI's most wanted and on the lam for years, but he really wishes people would stop comparing the character to recently convicted gangster Whitey Bulger.

"I want to put that to rest right now," Spader insists. "What was inspired by Whitey Bulger was just the fact that Whitey Bulger was on the FBI Most Wanted List for decades — I don't know how long, but 16 or 17 years; an enormous amount of time. Nobody knew where he was; nobody knew what he was up to, and then all of a sudden, boom, he's found. That was the only correlation."

Spader seems especially keen to clarify that his character in The Blacklist, the enigmatic Raymond Reddington, and a criminal like Bulger are very, very different.

"Whitey Bulger and Raymond Reddington do not relate to each other in any way, shape or form," he says.

"Whitey Bulger, as we all know from the front page of the New York Times every day, was a very powerful crime figure in South Boston. Raymond Reddington's background is very different. He worked in military intelligence, then worked for the NSA and then became a truly international criminal. So the correlation really stops after just the fact that somebody that was on the Most Wanted list for so many years and was invisible all of a sudden resurfaces."

And while we're discouraging comparisons, Spader would also appreciate it if viewers wouldn't draw links to Silence of the Lambs, even if the first episode of The Blacklist finds Spader's Reddington meeting FBI agent Elizabeth Keen (Megan Boone) in a similar fashion.

"Listen, there's no question that you see anybody who's in that containment that you see Raymond Reddington in at the very beginning — very dramatic and stylized containment — it brings up images that you've experienced in pop culture in the past," he says.

"So obviously the correlation seems right there, but Reddington's a very different person. He's not a serial killer in any way, shape or form. He's an operative and a businessman, and his business is crime."

Stabbing people can get so tiring

Luis Antonio Ramos, starring in the new City series Lucky 7, became emotional talking about the chance to play something other than a stereotypical Latino character.

"I was tired of playing bad guys and stabbing people in the neck," Ramos said during a recent panel discussion with the media.

In Lucky 7, Ramos' character works at a gas station in Queens, N.Y., and is a devoted family man. The series follows the impact that a shared lottery win has on the station's employees.

Only one thing is off limits when interviewing Caplan

Interview. The new star of Showtime's Masters of Sex won't dish on her ink, but she's open about everything else

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Michael Sheen and Lizzy Caplan star in Masters of Sex. CONTRIBUTED

Lizzy Caplan has a tattoo on her wrist, but she's not about to explain what it symbolizes.

"I never tell," says Caplan, who co-stars with Michael Sheen in the new Showtime series Masters of Sex, about pioneering researchers Masters and Johnson. "That's one that I'll never answer, but you can ask all you want about gross sex stuff."

Challenge accepted.

So how easy is it to talk about sex?
For me? Pretty easy. It's all I talk about (laughs). For everybody? I think it depends on who you are and where you live and how old you are, but for most people it's still not as easy as one would think in 2013.

Why do you think that is?
How many hours do you have? I think we've come a very, very, very long way since 1956, when the show starts.

But I also think we have a lot further to go, especially when it comes to women and sexuality.

How much do you talk about sex while filming?
I mean… how much do people talk about sex on any film set? It's like what anybody talks about, so… yeah. We talked about sex just as much as I did on Party Down.

How nerve-racking are the sex scenes to shoot?
I've done a few of them before, and it was very, very scary before doing my first one ever. As soon as that one was done, it was shockingly not scary. Because you grow to realize that nobody there is sitting there critiquing your body.

In fact this is a team of very, very accomplished and experienced men and women who know how to light and film you so you look absolutely great.

What stood out most about taking on the role of Virginia Johnson?
To the naked eye, this woman looks like a well-put-together 1950s secretary, but she's probably the bravest character I have yet to play. There were a lot of people — family, family friends — who told me that they had gone and seen her speak. They all came away with the same impression, which was that she was very charismatic, very smart and even in her older years extremely f—able.

Reign. You won't learn history from this show

Reign airs on CTV Two starting Thursday, Oct. 17. CONTRIBUTED

The cast and creator of the upcoming series Reign, about the rise of Mary, Queen of Scots, are defending creative liberties taken for the show. Reign stars Adelaide Kane as Mary, a 15-year-old who arrives at court because of an arranged marriage to Francis, the future king of France. One issue: Francis is played by hunky actor Toby Regbo, when in reality Francis was a sickly child. And to keep things interesting, there's a love triangle where Mary is torn between her husband-to-be and another hunky character named Sebastian, who never existed. Kane says the show's target demo of 18- to 34-year-olds won't care. "How many teenage girls do you know that are obsessed with history? I know I wasn't at that age," Kane said.

Joss Whedon. Writer enjoys creative freedom on Avengers spinoff

Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D. premieres Sept. 24 on CTV. CONTRIBUTED

Joss Whedon said he's been enjoying trust as much as freedom from his partners on the much-awaited sci-fi drama, Marvel's Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D. The prolific Whedon said recently that both ABC and Marvel have been involved in getting what they want as the series takes shape, but he added he has been allowed to fulfil his vision. He said everyone is on the same page, while noting pointedly he hasn't always been blessed with that sort of creative relationship. S.H.I.E.L.D., premiering Tuesday, Sept. 24, on CTV, picks up where the film Marvel's The Avengers left off — tracking a team of skilled agents who investigate super-human people around the world.

American muscle car is the real star of Getaway

IN FOCUS

Ethan Hawke and Selena Gomez in Getaway. CONTRIBUTED

Ethan Hawke and Selena Gomez are the stars of Getaway, a new action adventure film from Toronto-born director Courtney Solomon, but the scene-stealer is the Ford Shelby GT500 Super Snake, built by legendary car customizer Shelby American.

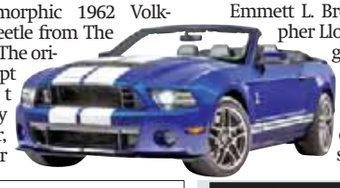
"Since Getaway takes place in a foreign country," said Soloman, "I felt strongly that we needed the quintessential American muscle car with enough star power to shine with Ethan and Selena."

Two Shelby GT500 Super Snakes were actually used to tell the story of a former race car driver who must steal the souped-up car and perform a number of duties to prevent his wife from being killed. The first can be seen in the Bulgarian-shot action scenes. The second was used during audio recording in Los Angeles.

The silver Super Snake is a sleek thing of beauty, but the most famous movie car has to be the 1963 Aston Martin DB5 used in Goldfinger. Not only was it the first and most recognized James Bond car — after the movie was released it was called "the most famous car in the world" — but it also inspired a popular Corgi car that became the biggest selling toy of 1964.

The British-made vehicle also appears in The Cannonball Run, driven by former Bond Roger Moore and in a highly stylized form as a secret agent (voiced by Michael Caine) in Pixar's Cars 2.

The first auto to have its own screen credit was Herbie, the anthropomorphic 1962 Volkswagen Beetle from The Love Bug. The original script didn't specify any type of car, but after filmmakers "auditioned" several Toyotas, a TVR sportscar, a Volvo, an MG and a pearl white Volkswagen Beetle, the VW was chosen because it was the only car the crew tried to reach out and pet.



Finally, who could forget Marty McFly's (Michael J. Fox) famous line, "Wait a minute. Wait a minute. Doc, uh... Are you telling me that you built a time machine... out of a DeLorean?"

Back to the Future used one of the 9,000 gull-winged DeLorean DMC-12 sport cars manufactured by the DeLorean Motor Company in Northern Ireland as a machine that propelled McFly back in time.

"Yes, the way I see it," said the machine's inventor, Dr. Emmett L. Brown (Christopher Lloyd), "if you're gonna build a time machine into a car, why not do it with some style?"

Closed Circuit

Director. John Crowley

Stars. Eric Bana, Rebecca Hall, Jim Broadbent

Eric Bana and Rebecca Hall play lawyers and ex-lovers who find themselves in the crosshairs when their defence of a suspected terrorist uncovers evidence that could cause a national scandal. Closed Circuit is a thriller with few thrills. In its rush to get to the climax — which is actually twisty and turny enough to be interesting — it blasts through plot details, not giving us any reason to care about the characters. Once again Bana proves to be a handsome cipher — he's a good-looking actor but as dull as dishwater — while Hall has charm to burn in an underwritten role. RICHARD CROUSE

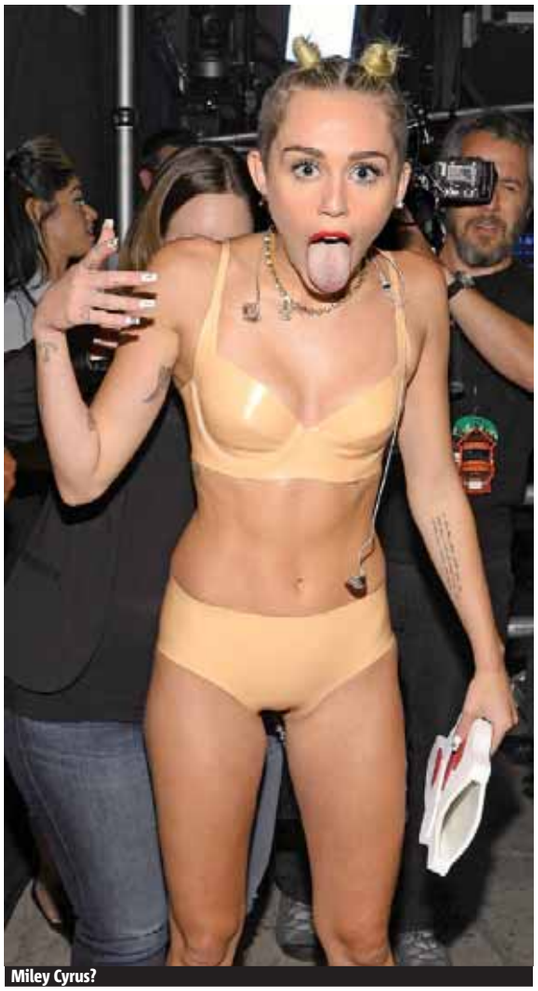
OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES



Miley Cyrus?

Cheyne Thomas has Miley's back with choice words for Kelly Clarkson

Miley Cyrus has been on the receiving end of plenty of criticism for her risqué MTV Video Music Awards performance with Robin Thicke, but she has at least one person in her corner: good pal Cheyne Thomas.

"Kelly Clarkson called Miley a pitchy stripper. Do you think she's mad because her past few singles flopped and she wasn't asked to perform?" Thomas posted to Twitter. "And she's fat and 30."

The Word

Are Rihanna and Drake rekindling?

It looks like Rihanna is spending time with old flame Drake, as the pair got in some quality time at N.Y. nightspot Sons of Essex the Friday prior to last weekend's MTV Video Music Awards, according to E! News.

"Drake came in around 10 p.m. with 10 people and had four large security guards. Rihanna came about an hour later, alone, not counting her security," a source says. "They sat in a back room, the lights were dimmed and there was sort of a barricade of tables blocking their group off."

But don't call it a rekindled romance just yet. "It seemed very casual," the source says, adding that Rihanna and Drake left a "generous" $500 tip before leaving separately.

Reunion was 'just for a minute'

Well, it's official. That two-minute 'N Sync reunion at the MTV Video Music Awards was it as far as the band getting back together, JC Chasez confirms to Ryan Seacrest during a radio interview.

"Everybody would ask us, 'When are you guys going to do something?' We did. Just for a minute, though," he says. "It was really about (Justin Timberlake) and all that he's accomplished. He wanted to acknowledge that part of his career, and so we all decided to do it."

If celebrity spotting and star gazing gets your adrenaline pumping, here are some holiday suggestions that will allow you to indulge your inner paparazzi

ON THE MOVE

Travel like a star

1 Be a high roller

For those who want to spend the money to rub shoulders with the world's rich and famous, a great website to bookmark is millionairesconcierge.com. It can help you plan a whole range of high-end vacations and buy tickets to celebrity-heavy events, like the Oscars, the Superbowl or the Emmys. ACTRESS JENNIFER LAWRENCE ARRIVES AT THE OSCARS/GETTY IMAGES

2 Or save your pennies

For the slightly more budget conscious, go to the tinsel towns of New York, Los Angeles or London, England. Reserve tickets in advance to the taping of your favourite late night talk show or TV sitcom to ensure some celeb face time. BE PART OF A STUDIO AUDIENCE!/GETTY IMAGES

3 Celeb hot spots

If you prefer to actually vacation alongside the stars, book your holiday to celebrity favourites like Las Vegas, Telluride, Colorado or the Caribbean islands of St. Bart's or Anguilla. Anguilla's laid back vibe is particularly attractive to celebrities like Ellen and Portia, Jay-Z and Beyoncé and camera-shy Janet Jackson, who was seen wandering around the supermarket alone. ST. BART'S HARBOUR/ISTOCK IMAGES

4 TIFF brings Hollywood north

This year's Toronto International Film Festival runs from Sept. 5 to the 15 and will provide opportunities to see stars such as Meryl Streep, Hugh Jackman and Jennifer Aniston. Film festivals are a great way to include star gazing into your vacation. Celebs are there to promote their movies and mingle, so they tend to be more open to the attention. Stake out the red carpets and lie in wait over cocktails at hip locations like the Drake Hotel, the Shangri-La or the recently opened Four Seasons Hotel.

5 Stay in their resorts and hotels

If you want to say you spent the night with a famous friend-to-be, check in to a celebrity-owned hotel like Bono and The Edge's The Clarence in Dublin, Ireland; Abba's Benny Andersson's Hotel Rivalin in Stockholm, Sweden or Elizabeth Hurley's No. 11 Cadogan Gardensin in London, England.

We'll always have Chinatown

Asian culture in Paris. After the Eiffel Tower and Arc de Triomphe, try an arrondissement that's a bit less touristy

Ask a Parisian about the city's Chinatown and you're likely to get an answer that's uncharacteristically reticent. "It's not exactly where I'd bring someone," natives will demur politely. It's the rare person who will say what most locals feel: "There's nothing to see there."

It's true that the high-rise buildings of the Quartier Chinois (Chinese Quarter), as it's formally known, seem somewhat soulless, especially compared to nearby monuments like the Eiffel Tower and Arc de Triomphe.

The Quartier Chinois also feels quieter and less crowded than Chinatowns in places like New York and San Francisco — though here, as in those cities, it's not unusual to see people practising tai chi outdoors.

But this is the largest Chinatown in Europe, and its hidden charms include, among other things, an impressive diversity, drawing on the heritage of French colonies like Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, and other parts of Southeast Asia.

Getting there

Take the 5, 6, or 7 Metro lines to the Place d'Italie station or the 14 to Olympiades. Stroll down the triangle that's formed by the forking of the two main arteries, Avenue de Choisy and Avenue d'Ivry. For the biggest slice of the action, head there from Wednesday through Sunday; as in other areas of the city, many places are closed on either Mondays or Tuesdays. It's located in the 13th arrondissement and is not to be confused with a smaller Asian enclave in Belleville.

Sights

No trip to the Quartier Chinois is complete without a stop to Tang Freres, 48 Avenue d'Ivry, one of the largest Asian supermarkets in Europe, which offers a dizzying hodgepodge of produce, spices, meats and even rice cookers.

Produce is the main draw at the smaller and more easily navigable Thai Fruits Center, 189 Avenue de Choisy, as well as unusual beverages such as canned bubble tea from Taiwan and Bourbon-brand beer from Reunion, the French-speaking island off the coast of Madagascar.

On the outskirts, the shopping centre at Les Olympiades, 44 Avenue d'Ivry, doubles as a popular gathering spot. There's even a Buddhist temple here.

Sounds

Easily spotted by the eye-popping mural painted onto one of its facades, the Notre Dame de Chine, 27 Avenue de Choisy, is a modern Catholic church that offers the occasional concert alongside Mass and traditional hymns.

Scents

Durian, the notoriously pungent Southeast Asian fruit, makes its way into tarts at Patisserie de Choisy, 62 Avenue de Choisy. Less adventurous eaters can sample pastries with milder flavours like pandan leaf and coconut, or pick up steamed buns with savoury meat fillings. Wash it all down, if you dare, with durian-flavoured bubble tea at Teawan, 129 Avenue de Choisy.

Tastes

Don't miss the mouth-watering and surprisingly inexpensive banh mi sandwiches at Hoa Nam, 51 Avenue d'Ivry, where flavourful vegetables and meats on fresh baguettes can be had for 3 euros.

For another quick bite, the cafeteria-style offerings at Tang Gourmet, 188 Avenue de Choisy, include dumplings, rolls and rice-and-meat plate combos to stay or to go.

For a hearty sit-down meal, follow the hordes to Pho Banh Cuon 14, known locally as Pho 14, 129 Avenue de Choisy, a Vietnamese noodle place whose runaway success has inspired many imitations in the area. The real deal has lines flowing out the door, though casual and efficient service make for short waits.

For Chinese cuisine, Sinorama, 23 Rue du Docteur Magnan, has long been a neighbourhood institution. The Cambodian fare at Mondol Kiri, 159 Avenue de Choisy, is among the pricier options, but also offers the most upscale ambience and experience in the vicinity. And for the trendy, Lao Lane Xang, 102 Avenue d'Ivry, pairs Laotian cuisine with modern decor.

Game on!

Pick up a paddle and test the ping-pong tables at Parc de Choisy. On sunny days, the fountains, foliage and carousel also make the park very picnic-friendly — nothing like the feeling of grass beneath your feet.

More than tacos and tequila: Mexico City's food scene on the rise

Eat your heart out. This capital city to the south offers foodies restaurants with French influence and a little Mexican history

ALEXANDRA CAVALLO
Metro World News in New York

When one thinks of Mexican food, a number of Americanized staples almost certainly come to mind. Tacos, enchiladas, burritos and, of course, tequila — these are items many first-time visitors to Mexico City would likely expect to find on most menus. And, yes, the city's eateries offer their fair share of traditional Mexican cuisine.

What first-time visitors to the increasingly more gentrified city might be surprised to learn, however, is that Mexico City's culinary scene is as diverse and dynamic as the city itself. Mexico City seems poised on a threshold, with roots in traditions both old and new.

The topic of tequila, for example, is sure to spark lively discussion — and strong opinions — among natives. Oldtimers are faithful to the spirit, quick to expound upon its many virtues and to eschew its trendier cousin mezcal (a similar liquor distilled from the maguey plant, a form of agave), which the city's younger and hipper denizens have become enamored with of late. Entire bars dedicated to the spirit, which is similar to tequila but with a smokier flavour, have sprung up in chichi areas of the city — ask an older Mexican gentleman, however, and he'll tell you it's just a passing fad.

The city's dining scene is similarly marked by old and new world flavours. Travellers who have dined in culinary meccas like New York and Paris will feel at home in swiftly on-the-rise neighbourhoods like Roma (Mexico City's answer to Williamsburg) where well-heeled, well-dressed young urbanites fill the sidewalk-side tables of hip restaurants and browse artsy (and often pricey) boutiques that would be right at home in one of the aforementioned metropolises.

For foodies travelling to Mexico City, we've rounded up a few must-hit restaurants at which both the food and the ambience capture the unique cultural balance that defines this city in flux.

Mexico City is straddling both old and new traditions. ISTOCK

Maximo Bistrot Local has a French-leaning menu. METRO WORLD NEWS

Roma is Mexico City's equivalent of Williamsburg. METRO WORLD NEWS

Maximo Bistrot Local

Be prepared to wait at this bustling restaurant in the neighbourhood of Centro. Locals and tourists alike flock to the unassuming eatery (its homey, minimalist design belies its sophisticated fare) where the eclectic, French-leaning menu is marked by gastronomic flourishes that will leave diners pleasantly surprised. Eduardo García, the young chef and owner, is a firm believer in sustainability — he employs his own divers to procure the fresh seafood that graces the often-changing menu and is an avid proponent of the farm-to-table movement that is on the rise in some of the best new restaurants in the States.

C'est la Vie

More often than not, hotel restaurants are forgettable, if functional, providing travellers too exhausted to venture out into the city in search of more exciting cuisine with a quick and easy meal before bed. Not so at this sleek restaurant located on the ground floor of Le Meridien hotel. Decidedly modern dishes and surprising flavour profiles mark the menu — a creamy, yet surprisingly light asparagus soup poured tableside from a ceramic carafe and a succulent duck breast cooked to perfection with glistening crispy skin are two standouts. Bonus points for an extensive wine list along with a variety of traditional Mexican beer options.

La Ópera Bar

For more casual dining, try this eatery in the heart of the city's centre. Dark wood panelling, red-velvet upholstered chairs and low lighting add to La Ópera's nostalgic, old-school vibe. Locals enjoy long repasts at the no-frills restaurant where, famously, the Mexican Revolutionary General Pancho Villa once fired a bullet above his head and into the ceiling, in a fit of rage over a table of fellow diners he felt were behaving too rowdily. That bullet hole is still there, adding to the sense of history and intrigue in the eatery. The menu, likewise, offers more traditional Mexican fare (try the mole) though more sophisticated epicurean delights share the large menu — among them a heaping dish of tiny sea snails in a savoury Chipotle sauce.

More eats

- Restaurante Tamayo. Another restaurant on the forefront of Mexico City's culinary revolution, this small café-like restaurant is tucked away in the shade of twisty trees just across the fairway from the lush greenery of Chapultepec Park (one of the largest city parks in the Western hemisphere, more expansive by far than New York's Central Park, where residents gather to escape the bustle of the urban city centre). Inside, the menu is elegantly written in chalk on a blackboard above the restaurant's take-out bar and simple wild flowers in mason jars adorn the tables. The locally-supplied menu changes often and offers some surprising options (a fresh Caprese salad, for example) alongside more traditional Mexican standbys.

For the next three Wednesdays, Metro's Theresa Albert will be serving up some easy to make and healthy recipes that are perfect for families or starving students.

This recipe serves three to four people. FLICKR: ROOEY202

Ingredients

- 1/2 onion, chopped ($0.44)
- 1 tbsp olive oil ($0.08)
- 2 cloves garlic, minced ($0.10)
- 1/2 cup tomatoes, chopped ($0.23)
- 3/4 cup frozen corn, thawed ($0.11)
- 1 can black beans, drained ($1.29)
- 2 tsp lime juice ($0.12)
- 1 package frozen spinach , thawed and drained well ($1.89)
- 1 tsp each oregano and chili powder ($0.11)
- 2 cups tortilla chips, crushed ($0.79)
- 3 oz cheddar cheese ($1.76)
- 1 cup salsa ($0.60)

Total $7.52 (about $2.50 per 3 people or $1.88 per 4 people)

You know how you love nachos but the calories will kill you? Here is a way to have all the taste and none of the guilt. That's because a black bean and veggie heavy casserole gives you the same crispy, cheesy feeling.

This is a great make ahead party dish too. Just stop before the baking step and pop it in the oven for 20 minutes before you want to serve.

1. Sauté onion in oil for 8 minutes until very soft. Stir in garlic, tomatoes, corn, black beans, lime juice, salt and pepper and cook 5 min to heat through. Stir in spinach and heat through; sprinkle in oregano and chili powder.

2. Prepare 8x8 casserole dish or baking pan with light coating of oil. Spread half of the crushed tortilla chips on the bottom. Spoon the sautéed veg over chips. Top with remaining chips and cheese.

3. Heat in 400F oven to melt cheese. Top with salsa and serve.

TAKE BACK DINNERTIME

In an increasingly busy world, the importance of gathering as a family over a meal is often overlooked. If sharing the table with friends and family is important to you, it's time to start making mealtime more meaningful.

Sharing a meal with loved ones offers many benefits – a family check-in can spark conversation about what's going on in each other's lives and provide precious opportunities to connect after a busy day. A simple and delicious meal with minimal preparation time can maximize quality time spent at the dinner table. Consider implementing a 'no technology at the table' rule to help make dinnertime more meaningful, and keep the focus on the conversation.

Ace of heart-to-hearts: How to know if you impressed your interviewer

I came, I saw, a contract. Don't be too perplexed as to whether you pleased the professionals

MEGHAN GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

Body of work: If you noticed that the interviewer was engaged in the conversation, nodding, smiling or giving off any other positive body language hints, you may just be on a fast track to success. ISTOCK

Before an interview, it's only natural to feel nervous. But post-interview is when the anxiety tends to kick in. Our mind hops on the over-thinking train and doesn't look back. The main reason this happens is because we know the decision is now out of our hands and we don't have much control over it.

You've gone through the application process and the interview. The next thing to do is wait patiently to hear back with the decision. But the time between the interview and when you hear back can seem like an eternity.

To help with the post-interview jitters and make the wait a little quicker, read these signs to look out for during and after the interview and what they could mean for you as the interviewee.

The interview went longer than scheduled

An interview that goes longer than scheduled is always a good sign that the interviewer wants to get to know you better and is interested in the conversation. This is a win-win situation because you get to learn more about the company and position, and you get more time to show how you will be a great asset.

They told you when you'll hear back

If the interviewer gives you a firm date as to when you'll hear back, it means that they have a timeline defined for the hiring process. This could also mean that during the interview they made the decision (hiring you!) and just need to speak with their team to work out the details. Even if the news isn't what you were hoping for, at least you have a concrete idea as to when you'll know the decision.

You talked about topics beyond the job description

Ensuring that you answer each question during the interview effectively is the first step toward having a successful interview. An interview that exceeds expectations is one where you answer every question and then start to talk about the contributions you can make beyond the job description. If you found that this was happening in the interview, you probably left the interviewer with a positive impression.

You hear that your references have been contacted

Reference-checking is time consuming. Unless you're being seriously considered, interviewers won't spend the time to do this. If you hear from your references that they have been contacted, this is a signal that they're finalizing their decision and you're a top candidate.

You felt like you fit

- I have had interviews before where I automatically thought "this is the perfect fit" or in other cases, "I'm not sure if this company/role is for me."
- If you felt as though you fit in well during the interview, chances are that the interviewer shared the same feeling. If an interviewer feels as though you had a good interview and also thinks you'll fit well with their environment, chances are you'll be on the top of their mind when making the final hiring decision.

As a student, it's important to be aware of where your tuition money goes. College and university can be expensive, but it's not just the courses you're paying for. There are services that can help the fitness, career, extracurricular and social aspects of your student life. Here are a few things you should use to your advantage while you're still in school:

Student discounts
Between tuition, books and a social life, being a student can mean a strained wallet. Student unions often provide student discounts on a number of activities such as movies, transit tickets, theme parks, sporting events and other special deals so you can go out once in awhile without worrying about spending a fortune.

Tip: Check frequently for different deals. You can visit your student union's website, stop by their office or give them a call to find out more.

Gym membership
For some, the gym is the perfect place to unwind before, after or in between studies. Gym memberships are included in many tuition packages, but students may find themselves "too busy" or claim that the gym "isn't their thing."

Exercise is an important part of keeping the body and mind healthy. If you're not into lifting weights or running on the treadmill, here are two alternatives to consider:

• Take a group class: Some gyms offer fitness classes such as yoga, zumba, pilates and cycling. There may even be some unique ones such as martial arts, aqua fitness and hip hop dance.
• Join an intramural team: Athletic councils or facilities often host intramural teams within the school. If you like to play for fun but not competitively, this is a great way to get exercise, meet new people and improve your game. Teams are usually separated by gender or, in some cases, are co-ed. Chances are there's a soccer, basketball, volleyball or floor hockey team you can be part of.

Tip: Get a copy of the exercise schedule. Try different classes by yourself or with a friend and see which ones you like best. Mark an activity or two into your weekly schedule as you would with academic classes.

Health centre
Students spend most of their time at school and may not have time to go to the doctor. That's where the health centre comes in. Health and dental coverage are included in your tuition fees, whether you have a medical plan or not. The health centre usually covers counselling services, nutrition and blood tests.

Tip: You can opt out of health and dental services and receive a refund on the fees. Check with your university for more details.

Credit requirement checks

- Many students don't realize the importance of keeping track of their credits. Registrar's offices have academic counsellors who specifically look after credit requirements, which determine your graduation. It's good to be aware of this as soon as possible and keep a list of your credits in mind with your academic calendar.

Tip: Make an appointment with your department's student advisor to go over your credit requirements. One course could determine your fate at graduation. It's always best to be sure.

Tennis. Top-ranked Canadian player slams 28 aces in straight-sets win over qualifier

Milos Raonic has advanced to the second round of the U.S. Open.

The 10th-seeded player from Thornhill defeated Italian qualifier Thomas Fabbiano 6-3, 7-6 (6), 6-3 on Tuesday.

"In general, it was a good day," said Raonic.

Raonic will face Pablo Andujar in the second round after the Spaniard beat Thiemo de Bakker of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-4, 6-4.

"He started doing well in 2011, just like me," Raonic said of Andujar. "He's very consistent. He can be aggressive, especially with his forehand, and I've got to play more aggressive than I did today.

"I've got to clean up a bit off the baseline and hopefully serve like I did today."

Raonic put on a serving display against the 179th-ranked Fabbiano, who was making his Grand Slam debut. The Italian gave only the slightest hint of trouble when he got a break back in the second set for 4-all before losing the set in a tiebreaker.

"I know he's very capable, I remember him from juniors," Raonic said of Fabbiano. "He got through quallies, so he must be playing well in that situation. I just sort of dealt with it as best I could, and I'm happy with how the result turned out."

Raonic took a 4-2 lead in the third set and sealed the victory with a series of untouchable serves.

The Canadian finished with 52 winners, including 28 aces.

"Serve helped for sure, got me through a lot of difficult situations," said Raonic. "I was struggling definitely from the baseline, but when I sort of needed it I was able to pick it up on both sides." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Meanwhile, Vasek Pospisil of Vernon, B.C., suffered a tough loss to Brazilian qualifier Rogerio Dutra, going down 4-6, 3-6, 7-6 (9), 6-2, 7-6 (10).

- With the fifth-set tiebreaker tied 10-10, the umpire overruled a linesperson's call on Dutra's shot that was initially ruled long. That gave Dutra match point, which he then converted.

Blue Jays roughed up by Yankees

Alfonso Soriano hit two of New York's four home runs and Andy Pettitte threw seven shutout innings as the Yankees defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 7-1 on Tuesday at Rogers Centre.

Soriano hit a towering three-run shot in the first inning and added a solo shot in the third. The second blast was his 28th homer of the season and 400th of his career.

Mark Reynolds and Alex Rodriguez added solo homers for the Yankees, who had 12 hits on the night. Pettitte (10-9) allowed five hits and two walks while striking out three.

New York (70-62) scored four runs off Toronto starter J.A. Happ (3-4) before the Blue Jays recorded an out. Brett Gardner doubled, moved to third on a wild pitch and scored when Derek Jeter stroked a single up the middle.

The Blue Jays got on the board in the eighth inning when Kevin Pillar doubled to the wall in left-centre field to score Ryan Goins from first base. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Picking through the brittle bones of a lost Jays season

Avian bone syndrome. Fragile fans may have flown the coop, but there are still reasons to give some attention the epic failure that is 2013

ETHAN ROTBERG
ethan.rotberg@metronews.ca

Another disastrous season means that, with a month to go, you've probably stopped watching the Toronto Blue Jays. And if you went into spring with your hopes and dreams pinned to the success of the club, you're probably more angry than apathetic.

By now you've given away your September tickets, defaced your Emilio Bonifacio jersey, cancelled your cable subscription and possibly won money betting on the Astros.

But before you pull out your Buffalo Bills apparel, there are still a few reasons to pay attention to the Jays when the calendar turns to September:

Gose runner

Anthony Gose, one of the team's top prospects, is getting regular major-league at bats with injuries to Jose Bautista, Colby Rasmus and Melky Cabrera. Watching Gose in September will be less a celebration of his big-league arrival than it will be an opportunity to scrutinize his batting ability. He may be exciting on the base paths and on defence, but Gose has had nearly 3,000 plate appearances as a professional with very little offence to show for it.

Playing doctor

For the second year in a row, fans continue to work on informal degrees in sports medicine while following the Jays. Watching injury updates during the final month should give answers to questions like How long does it take to come back from Tommy John surgery? When and how did Bautista hurt his hip? What kind of setback did Rasmus experience with his oblique injury? And where is Brandon Morrow and what the heck is an entrapped radial nerve?

September callups

Teams that fall out of the playoff race normally get to take a nice long look at top prospects in September. Injuries have brought a few Buffalo Bison players up early this year, but there are still some names to look for in a Jays uniforms next month including Kyle Drabek, Drew Hutchison, Marcus Stroman and Sean Nolin.

Meaningful baseball

The 2013 mantra was "meaningful baseball." Finally fans would see games in September that mattered. Well, Jays games against September opponents like the Yankees, Orioles, Red Sox and Rays will matter, but the consequence will be one-sided. And while the idea of being spoiler is like getting a participation ribbon, playing teams in a playoff race ensures some level of excitement right to the end.

Jays GM stands by Gibbons

Toronto Blue Jays general manager Alex Anthopoulos has given his skipper a vote of confidence.

- Speaking to reporters before Tuesday night's 7-1 loss to the New York Yankees, Anthopoulos said manager John Gibbons will return as manager in 2014.
- When asked about the possibility of replacing Gibbons, Anthopoulos said, "There's never been any thought on that respect at all."
- Gibbons reportedly signed a two-year deal with options last fall. After Tuesday's games, the 59-74 Blue Jays are 19 games behind the first-place Boston Red Sox.

The 2013 Nissan Leaf

ALL PHOTOS CONTRIBUTED

Review. Norway shows the way environmentally as Leafs continue to fly off the shelves

They're clever people, the Norwegians. In Norway electric cars are flying off the shelves. Why? Because in Norway there is no sales tax or road tax to pay on EVs and in cities, including Oslo, parking and charging — via a comprehensive citywide infrastructure — is free.

Best of all you can drive in the bus lanes, improving commuting times significantly. Consequently Nissan's electric Leaf has been selling very well there.

Helped by its conventional packaging, the compromises of Leaf ownership are very few. Which is why we were testing the new Leaf in Norway, because the Leaf and the city of Oslo represent one vision of an automobile future for all of us.

This 2013 Leaf model has been improved by increasing power and range and by moving the plug-in charging unit to the front of the car, increasing boot space by 40 litres.

The car is also lighter and has improved ride thanks to a retuned chassis tweaked for European tastes. The result is that this electric car has become more comfortable, practical and fun. In fact it's more conventionally car-like, which can only be a good thing.

Inside the Nissan Leaf you'll find five seats, five doors, and plenty of smart storage throughout. Plus all the high tech gadgets you would expect from a car this innovative, like Bluetooth connectivity, Nissan intelligent key with push button start, and a USB connection port for iPods and other compatible devices.

• Biggest plus
Knowing you will rarely have to deal with gas stations. Or pay for fuel for that matter. The charging speed has been halved too.

•Biggest flaw
The steering doesn't feel fantastically responsive at speed, though around town this translates into below-average manoeuvrability.

The 2013 Nissan Leaf

- •Type. Four-door
- •Engines (hp). 80 kW electric motor (109PS of power)

Interior

Now available in more conventional black trim instead of beige, the interior is familiar yet futuristic; a clever mix of comfort with cool blue accents and icons to remind you you're a trendsetter.

Performance

Zippy, comfortable and quiet, this kind of progress feels efficient and fun. The new Leaf feels faster than its 0 to 100 km/h time of 11.5 seconds suggests.

Design

The refinements are subtle, so the styling remains divisive and is not to everyone's taste. In other words, it's kind of funny looking.

Take precautions with your Porsche

Second gear.
2006-2012
Porsche Cayman

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
drive@metronews.ca

Entering the 2013 model year, the Porsche Cayman has been updated and revamped from the ground up — meaning that the first-generation of the popular sports model has moved fully into used-car territory.

Both Cayman and Cayman S models were available in this generation. The 'S' indicates the presence of the larger-displacement engine and some supporting performance upgrades to the vehicle's brakes, tires and suspension. An exclusive, track-oriented Cayman R model was available towards the end of this generation, too. Feature content included, adjustable shock absorbers, automatic climate control, xenon lights, and a premium audio system.

CONTRIBUTED

Engine

All models got a mid-mounted flat-six engine with rear-wheel drive. Displacements included 2.7, 2,9 or 3.4 litres, with output ranging between 245 and 325 horsepower. Manual or automatic / dual-clutch gearboxes were available.

What owners dislike

Tight cabin quarters for larger drivers, as well as a noisy ride and dated interior appearance were among the most common complaints.

What owners like

Styling, handling, pedigree and exclusivity were all given as key purchase considerations by Cayman owners. Other pluses include the two-trunk layout, easy entry and exit, and an 'easy to drive' character. Fuel mileage is also rated highly.

The verdict

Most Cayman owners report a worry-free driving experience — though some well-documented and serious issues mean a mechanical check-up is a must. A model from a Certified Pre Owned program is your most confident buy.

Common issues

Check the transmission, avoiding any Cayman model with the manual gearbox that shifts roughly, grinds during upshifts or exhibits clutch slippage. If the model in question is automatic or PDK dual-clutch equipped, be sure there's no difficulty in moving the shift lever between its settings. If there is, the Cayman you're considering probably needs a new motor mount. Some pre-2009 Cayman models suffered a well-documented issue with failure of the engine's Intermediate Main Shaft (IMS) which could result in catastrophic engine failure. It's unclear how many units were affected—though Porsche redesigned the engine range without the troublesome IMS from 2009 and on. Inspect the Cayman's oil level and condition with the assistance of a Porsche mechanic, too. Models used in a track setting with high-grip racing tires may have suffered from oil starvation, which could damage the engine. Other important checks should include monitoring for oil smoke from the tailpipes at startup, and a check beneath the vehicle for a leaky rear main seal.

Charging ahead to keep electric vehicles going

Driving force. With the sales of electric and hybrid cars rising, buyers now need to know where to recharge

JIL MCINTOSH
drive@metronews.ca

No matter where you are, you're probably not very far away from a gas station. You can confidently drive almost anywhere, knowing you can buy fuel when you get low. But for people with electric cars, finding a spot to recharge away from home is far more difficult, since public charging infrastructure is still in its infancy.

"It's the chicken and egg," says Teresa Di Felice, director of government and community relations for CAA South Central Ontario (SCO). "It's really in what comes first. Do we need a certain number of vehicles before there's a willingness to spend on the infrastructure, or does it need to be in place to encourage more people to purchase these vehicles?"

Since CAA SCO has an electric car, it has a charging station installed at its head office, as do a few other CAA locations. The auto club makes the station available to anyone who needs to plug in an electric vehicle.

Electric infrastructure presents an entirely new challenge for automakers. Up until now, they just sold the car while oil companies set up the refuelling stations, but they're now involved in the charging process. It's also an issue for governments, many of which are creating and funding programs for public installations. The challenges include where to put the stations, how to make them accessible, and who should pay for them, including the installation costs and the price of charging up. Di Felice estimates that, depending on the unit and how much wiring must be done to install it, a public charging station can run between $3,000 and $15,000.

Take note

- Find your station. A Canada-wide list of charging stations, as well as information on electric vehicle costs and information, can be found at electricvehicles.caa.ca.
- Hybrid or fully electric? Not all plug-in cars run solely on their charge. Plug-in hybrids revert to gasoline/electric mode when the stored charge runs out, while extended-range cars use a small gas engine to generate more electricity.

The good news is that, just as gas pump nozzles fit every vehicle, the electric plugs are standardized throughout the industry, and all cars can charge from every station. The major issue is how long it takes. Fast-charging stations that can top up the battery in a short period are very rare, and not all vehicles are equipped for this type of high-power "refuelling."

Until quick-charge becomes more widespread, public charging stations will be most common in places where drivers stay for longer periods, such as work, stores, restaurants, or hotels. "The biggest impediment for people purchasing electric vehicles is 'range anxiety,'" Di Felice says, referring to the fear of running out of power. "These charging initiatives are useful for those who want to buy these vehicles."

Cool detectives ride bicycles ... said no one, ever

It's true. There isn't one cool detective who pedaled a bicycle to the scene of the crime. Cool cars became just as important to the image of a TV gumshoe as a fedora and long coat. And later on, what they drove became an integral part of their identity. Take Robert Urich in Vega$. First airing in 1978, he played P.I. Dan Tanna who drove his 1957 Thunderbird right up to his desk in the office. How cool was that? Well, that's just the beginning of what we have in store for you.

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

The Rockford Files

This show featured one of the best instrumental themes and one of Hollywood's most popular stars in the person of James Garner. As easy-going detective Jim Rockford, Garner drove a base Pontiac Firebird Esprit instead of a flashier, snorkel-hooded Firebird Formula or a Trans Am complete with giant "flaming-chicken" hood decal. But the understated tan-coloured Esprit was the perfect match for Garner's low-key acting style.

Hardcastle and McCormick

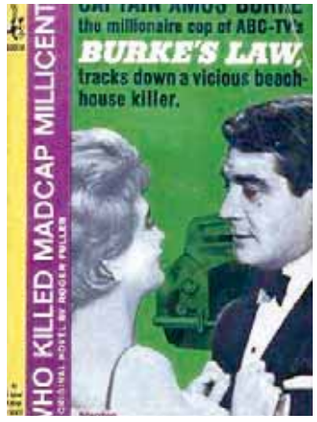
A retired judge (Brian Keith as Milton C. Hardcastle) and his ex-con assistant Mark "Skid" McCormick (Daniel Hugh Kelly) exacted vigilante justice upon those scofflaws who remained on the lam. McCormick clearly never understood the concept of working under cover since he drove "The Coyote," an overbaked McLaren M6 GT replica that went literally airborne during each episode's opening credits.

Columbo

The rumpled police detective (perfectly played by the late Peter Falk) drove a beat-up 1959 Peugeot 403 cabriolet that appeared to be equally trashed. Either poor old Columbo was stuck with a heavy alimony tab, or he was a terrible credit risk who couldn't qualify for a car loan to save his life.

Starsky & Hutch

Technically, Paul Michael Glaser as David Starsky and David Soul as Ken "Hutch" Hutchinson were police officers, but they looked and acted so much like private investigators that they've been included here as honorary members. What passed for their "cop car" was actually a Gran Torino — a series of 1975 and '76 models, actually — supplied by Ford that the actors nicknamed the Striped Tomato. The fans loved its outlandish paint scheme and Ford even produced 1,000 cars for the public to buy.

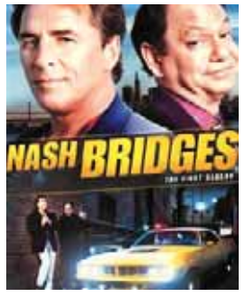


Burke's Law

If Columbo looked like a bum, then Los Angeles chief of detectives Amos Burke (Gene Barry) lived at the opposite end of the socio-economic scale. Burke resided in a Hollywood mansion and rode around in a chauffeured 1962 Rolls-Royce Silver Cloud II. Wonder if he was on the take?

Nash Bridges

An otherwise forgettable TV-cop drama featuring former Miami Vice star Don Johnson is notable for two things: the scene-stealing Cheech Marin (of Cheech and Chong fame) and the High Impact Yellow 1971 Hemicuda convertible. Apparently, due to the scarcity of '71 cars (all high-dollar collectors items), the producers substituted '70 models that were made up to look like the '71 models, and dressed them up to look like the Hemicuda cars. In fact, none of cars used in the series actually contained the 426 Hemi engine. Why the 'Cuda? It was at Don Johnson's insistence.



Magnum P.I.

Tom Selleck's Hawaii-based character had the mustache, the muscles and the muscle in the form of a Ferrari 308. In the show, the Ferrari belonged to Robin Masters, an unseen benefactor who would "lend" his car to Magnum to work on cases. How tough a gig could that be? Show regulars will notice that the Ferrari was replaced with newer models as the seasons wore on.

Cannon

William Conrad convincingly portrayed rotund private eye Frank Cannon who seemed to be always fighting crime from behind the wheel of a Mark-series Lincoln Continental coupe. Each season, that model year's Lincoln seemed to grow larger . . .

The Saint

Then-future 007 star Roger Moore was the epitome of English elegance in this popular crime melodrama. The smartest move Volvo ever made was to supply Moore's character, Simon Templar, with a sporty Volvo P1800 for tooling around swinging London town. This long-running series helped put both Moore and Volvo on the map.

Nissan's trucks now diesel-fuelled zombies

Autopilot. The Titan, accompanied by the Cummins engine, will attempt to change the company's fortunes in the light-duty market

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

The diesels keep coming, like zombies that won't take decapitation for an answer; only with lots more torque and fuel range, and the fact that we're actually glad to see them.

This time it's Nissan, which announced last week it would offer a newly developed Cummins 5.0-litre V8 turbo-diesel in its next-generation Titan pickup.

Putting a Cummins V8 diesel into the Titan will certainly shake things up in the light-duty full-size pickup segment, where torque is highly prized and bragable.

Television ads that brag about the torque ratings of full-size pickups are only slightly less testosterone fuelled than a Megadeath concert — they always make me want to put on a pair of overalls and work boots and throw heavy stuff around the living room.

Nissan sold about 3,500 Titans in Canada in 2012. Compare that to Ford, which sold over 106,000 F-Series pickups during the same year.

"Hopefully the Titan will no longer be the best kept secret," said Nissan V-P, Fred Diaz, in a statement.

"We're going to be the only ones to have a V8 diesel in a 1500 truck, which is pretty neat space to play in because you're actually going to be more powerful and bigger and have more capability than a 1500 but not quite at the level of a 2500."

Diesels have always been available on 2500 and 3500 heavy-duty pickups, but the torque-endowed diesel engine makes huge sense for any truck, and we're finally getting some diesel action in our light-duty pickups.

Ram 1500 gets a diesel option for 2014 — a 3.0-litre V6 made by Chrysler's Italian partner, VM Motori — and GM is heavily rumoured to be contemplating a diesel option for its next-generation of the mid-size Chevrolet Colorado and GMC Canyon pickups.

GM's already got a suitable diesel engine; it just has to North Americanize the diesel built for the Colorado sold in Thailand, Southeast Asia, Brazil and Australia.

Those markets, and Europe, have always been diesel savvy with their smaller trucks, while we've always have to look longingly over the seas for some of the action.

In Europe they put diesels on everything. You can probably get a Peugeot bicycle with a diesel.

There are certainly reasons why the automakers haven't given us smaller trucks with diesels until now, but probably not good ones. The dominance of the full-size truck that can easily accommodate the big lump of a (relatively inexpensive) V8 is probably one of them. Another is our historically crappy diesel fuel, which couldn't be tolerated by global diesel engines designed to run on the better stuff.

The Cummins engine destined for the Titan will instantly make the Titan a pickup celebrity. For competitive reasons,

Nissan is not yet announcing launch dates for the new Titan. But apparently engineering prototypes powered by the Cummins engine are already undergoing extensive public-highway performance and durability testing.

If you see a current Titan pulling a train or something similar, it's probably testing one of those Cummins engines. Industry analysts predict the North American "light duty" pickup wars will soon be full of diesel-equipped competitors. About time…

The Nissan Titan holds the powerful engine.

The receiving end

An essential part of any hitch system is the ball mount, or receiver. Many people simply toss this component into the back of their pickup trucks or inside their sport utes' stowage compartment, where it often gets lost or left behind somewhere. Worse is that it crashes around the cabin when driving. The Receiver Caddy from Du-Ha Inc. is designed to securely hold up to two standard-size ball mounts. Constructed of heavy-duty aluminum, the Caddy attaches to an appropriate spot inside your vehicle (it has drain holes for pickup installations) without drilling. Once in place, the receiver(s) can be safeguarded with an optional key lock. The Receiver Caddy itself sells for $35 US, while adding the lock kit costs an extra 15 bucks. You can obtain the necessary ordering information and watch the instructional video at receivercaddy.com.

Buy a bodyguard

People place (or misplace) their trust in jack stands, wooden blocks or other items to prop up their vehicles while working beneath them. The Bodyguard from Creepex features a built-in protective framework that has been designed to provide an extra measure of safety if the vehicle somehow falls. In fact, the company claims that the Bodyguard can support up to 30,000 pounds (13,600 kilograms). As well, the product's design means you won't have to lift your vehicle any higher than you normally would when using a regular creeper. Each unit includes three heavy-duty 15-centimetre locking casters and an ergonomic four-position backrest with lumbar support. The Bodyguard sells for $500 US and is available in a variety of colours directly from the manufacturer at creepex.com.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
As Mars moves into the dynamic sign of Leo today, your energy and confidence will surge. Yes, all things are possible but that does not mean you have to try to do it all at the same time.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You should make an effort to convince loved ones that you are still on their side. Why might they doubt you? Because you have been strangely uncommunicative of late.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Don't stop to analyze your motives: act while the passion is hot. One bold move could be all it takes today to start the ball rolling in your favour again.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
There are major opportunities heading your way but are you in the right frame of mind to take advantage of them? Take an hour out of your busy schedule today to get your head back in the right place.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
The world needs people who are willing to take a risk and with Mars moving into your sign today, it's you. Don't wait to be told to do what you feel is right — self-belief is all the permission you need.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Although the Sun and Mercury are boosting your confidence in a big way, other influences suggest you may have to be on your guard for secret enemies over the next few days. You can't be too careful.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Others may be raving about a new fad but you have your doubts it is as good as they think it is. Don't be afraid to take an opposing view. Your judgment is sound.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You seem even more ambitious than usual now and you will certainly not be inclined to settle for second best. You may have to fight it out with an equally ambitious rival but it will be a one-sided battle.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
The next few days will see a big change in the way you look at an event. You will begin to realize that you have only part of the story and the missing parts are of huge significance.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
It may seem as if you are out of touch with the feelings of those around you but that's OK. You are who you are and don't have to act in ways that don't come naturally to you.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You are in the middle of a creative phase and anything of an artistic nature will go well for you over the next few days. This is an especially good time to learn a new skill. What do you dream of doing?

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Tough decisions must be made and you must expect some people to be less than happy with what you decide. That's too bad. If they had acted sooner, it would not be down to you to put things right. SALLY BROMPTON
